DUDE ... MAYOR EMANUEL IS TOTALLY UNDECIDED ON POT POLICY

Chicago Tribune

Mayor Emanuel indicated Wednesday he has yet to make up his mind on a push by several aldermen to issue tickets to those caught with a small amount of marijuana.

"If you look at other cities that have done something like this, they have also created their own set of problems," Emanuel said. "If we do it, and if I put my support, which I'm not doing yet, I want to look at it from both sides and be thoughtful."

Ald. Danny Solis (25th) wants Chicago police to issue $200 tickets rather than arrest people caught with 10 grams or less of marijuana. Supporters presented city arrest data that they said shows police disproportionately arrest minorities under current laws.

IN OTHER COUNCIL NEWS

Plastic bag ban?

Large stores in Chicago would be banned from putting shoppers' products in plastic bags under a proposal introduced Wednesday.

Ald. Proco "Joe"
Moreno (1st) said
the plastic bag ban would improve the environment. "Our streets, our sidewalks, our parks are filled every day with these bags," Moreno said, holding up a plastic shopping bag at a City Hall news conference.

Homeless rides to shelter

Emanuel took steps to make sure homeless people seeking help in the wee hours of the morning during the winter can get rides to shelters—just two days after aldermen pushed back on the issue.

Budget flexibility

Emanuel said he's willing to discuss alternatives to his proposed budget after a majority of the City Council sent him a letter expressing concerns about cuts to social services and public safety. The letter, signed by 28 of 50 aldermen, said cuts to libraries, public health centers, graffiti removal teams and the 911 center must be averted.

Head tax repealed

Aldermen voted to eliminate the much-maligned "tax on jobs" by mid-2014, helping Emanuel keep a campaign promise. Under the so-called head tax, companies with 50 or more employees earning at least $4,300 every three months pay a $4-a-month tax for each employee. On July 1, the tax will be cut to $2-per-employee each month. It will be wiped out two years later.

Is your fave restaurant clean? Look it up

Chicago Tribune

Grocery stores, corner shops and some gas stations largely would police themselves on food inspections under a plan Mayor Emanuel put forth Wednesday.

About 2,500 of the 15,000 or so businesses in Chicago that sell food would see inspectors less frequently and send reports to the city Health Department. Stores that sell only pre-packaged food would fall into the low-risk category under a new three-tier inspection system.

Medium-risk establishments—largely fast food joints where workers prepare food but few ingredients are stored for very long—would get more frequent visits from the city.

Falling into the highest-risk category would be restaurants that store ingredients for longer periods. Think hotels, health officials said. Restaurants that have had repeated problems also would find inspectors darkening their doorways more often.

As described by Emanuel, the program neatly fits two of his administration's motifs: It frees compliant business owners from bureaucratic entanglements with government; and it allows the city to better use its limited resources, in this case the 32 food inspectors tasked with checking on about 15,000 establishments that sell food.

"If you look at a history and you have a good performance, I want to focus our resources, which are few, on the restaurants that have chronic problems as it relates to health and safety," Emanuel said after introducing his plan to the City Council.

The city's Health Department on Wednesday announced easier and more timely access to food inspection reports through its inspection website online. Check out your usual haunts at bit.ly/rH5Hqd.

Time to reclaim our lunch breaks

Katie Donbavand » redeye@

Lunch has always been my favorite part of the work day. I know that isn't a very controversial stand to take—I might as well declare that the Chicago winters get pretty bad or Hugh Jackman should have taken his shirt off more in "Real Steel"—but, nonetheless, I stand by it. Lunch is awesome.

Lunch is the breath that breaks up my day. It's a chance to escape my desk and clear my head. Just when my eyeballs feel like they're going to melt from overexposure to spreadsheets and Google Docs, in swoops my lunch break, like Batman after a call from Commissioner Gordon, here to save the day. I grab my lunchbox, stride into the sun-drenched kitchen, and take a seat ... alone. Most days, I'm one of only a few people in my office who takes an actual lunch break.

From a purely anecdotal standpoint, it seems as if lunch breaks are on the endangered species list. Most of my co-workers eat at their desks, working through lunch even though my company has a kitchen and encourages you to get away from your cube. My friends all say the same thing. Most of their co-workers labor through their break, eating a depressing meal awash in the glow of their computer. Office kitchens across the nation are gathering dust with no one to socialize in them, no one to leave a snarky note ordering the microwave be cleaned up.

The decline of the lunch break is, it seems, self-imposed. Perhaps it's the current economic climate that's hanging over the heads of the corporate workforce. A heavier workload taken on by thinly spread, post-layoff offices combined with a desire to impress bosses (because the sharp blade of the layoff ax never seems to be too far away) is coaxing employees to remain in their cubicles for the duration of their 40(-plus)-hour work weeks.

Some of the blame also must fall the globalization of business. Now that we're all so very connected, workers are expected to accommodate clients in different time zones—often at the expense of Central Standard (Lunch) Time.

Whatever the cause, the disappearing lunch break is making us miss out on a much-needed mental break resulting in lower productivity and burnout.

Remember what happened to Jack Torrance in "The Shining"? All work and no play means you end up
murdering Scatman
Crothers with an axe.
I'll pass on that, thanks.
Chicago: It's time to take back your lunch break. Being overworked shouldn't be a badge of fortitude. Please, I implore you, get out of your cube. It's time to stop the zombification of your work day. Remember, even zombies shuffle outside to rot in the sunshine every once in a while.

'Occupy' supporters walk out

Chicago Tribune

About 300 Occupy Chicago demonstrators and students who have walked out of area colleges began marching on City Hall shortly after 6 p.m., a show of support for their Oakland, Calif., colleagues who are protesting recent clashes with police that left a 24-year-old Marine veteran critically injured.

The Chicago protesters began their march at LaSalle and Jackson, with police blocking traffic as they marched through the Loop.

The Occupy Oakland group called for a student walk-out and a citywide general strike Wednesday as part of a daylong demonstration in the city's downtown. In response, Occupy Wall Street asked other Occupy movements nationwide to organize demonstrations in support.

Tensions have flared among Oakland protesters since police raided the group's encampment Oct. 25, arresting more than 100 people and using tear gas against the crowds. Oakland police said the officers used the tear gas because some protesters had pelted officers with bottles, rocks and paint.

Scott Olsen, a two-tour veteran of the Irac War, suffered a skull fracture when a projectile fired by police officers reportedly struck him in the head.

Other "Occupy" cities have also been the sites of violent encounters between demonstrators and police, including New York and Denver. No such incidents have been reported during the six weeks of demonstrations in Chicago.

Men posing as undercover police officers recently have talked their way into two Northwest Side homes and were unsuccessful in a third try, prompting investigators to warn residents of three neighborhoods. The unknown number of men have shown up at least three times since Saturday, approaching homeowners, identifying themselves as cops while flashing gold badges and wearing police-style radios, according to a community alert issued by Grand Central Area detectives. Mugger returns property to man he beat, robbed

Sidney Tyson feared for his life when one of the young muggers who beat and robbed him at a South Shore bus stop came back minutes later.

But instead of another beating—or worse—the 63-year-old Tyson was inexplicably handed back his smart phone and $5 bus pass.

"I thought they were coming back to jump on me again," Tyson said Wednesday morning, hours after the attack that happened at about 8:20 p.m. Tuesday near South Shore Drive and 75th Street.

"I thought maybe they came back with some weapons and they were going to shoot me this time," said Tyson, who used his cane to fend off the robbers.

Police arrested three suspects a short time later after the same group apparently robbed a man of his wallet about a block away.

Tyson said he was attacked from behind by five or six young men who punched him and knocked him to the ground as they grabbed his phone.

Tyson, a former investigator for the state's Department of Financial and Professional Regulation, was able to land one good hit on his attackers with a cane he has used since suffering a series of strokes.

But the blow came with a price: The mugger sprang up and kicked him in the face. He says he is on the mend.

WikiLeaks editor Julian Assange (above right) lost a court battle Wednesday to stay in the United Kingdom and will be extradited to Sweden to face questioning over sex charges, a court ruled. The justices said they will hold another hearing later this month to determine whether Assange can appeal.

Assange, who has been under house arrest for nearly a year while waiting to find out the results, said Wednesday he will now consider his next steps.

Case closed on Quade

Who's on deck remains a mystery-but it won't be Ryne Sandberg

Chicago Tribune

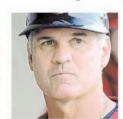

Mike Quade is out as Cubs manager with one year remaining on his two-year deal, and Ryne Sandberg won't be considered as his replacement.

Cubs president of baseball operations Theo Epstein flew to Florida on Wednesday to personally give Quade the news.

Quade had no regrets, harbored no ill will toward the new regime and appreciated Epstein flying to Tampa to give him the news in person.

"It's a huge disappointment, obviously," Quade said. "There's not a lot of sense in dwelling on that. I was treated extremely well by Theo and [general manager Jed Hoyer]. They're two straight-up guys, and as disappointed as I am, I enjoyed our conversation."

The shocking news was that Sandberg would not be considered. In a statement, Epstein said the next Cubs manager "must have managerial or coaching experience at the major league level."

Sandberg

That would leave Sandberg out of the picture. The highest level he's managed at is Triple-A, and he's never been a major league coach.

Two sources told the Tribune's David Haugh that Epstein spoke with Sandberg to inform him that he wasn't in the team's plans.

Quade, who beat out Sandberg for the Cubs' job last year, went 95-104 after taking over for Lou Piniella in August 2010. The Cubs were 71-91 in 2011.

Epstein's statement said his next manager must have "leadership and communication skills; he must place an emphasis on preparation and accountability; he must establish high standards and a winning culture; he must have integrity and an open mind."

Former Red Sox manager Terry Francona likely is on Epstein's list if he wants to return to managing this quickly.

Jon Heyman of Sl.com tweeted that Texas pitching coach Mike Maddux and Milwaukee hitting coach Dale Sveum could be candidates for the Cubs' opening. Foxsports.com columnist Ken Rosenthal reported that the Cubs aren't focused on Francona and are unlikely to hire a sitting manager.

Greet him in St. Louis? Ryne Sandberg confirmed reports Wednesday that St. Louis has asked for permission to interview him for the managerial vacancy created by Tony La Russa's retirement. "I hope the opportunities arise, and that's one of them," the Hall of Fame second baseman said. "I'm still optimistic and excited about the possibilities." TRIBUNE

This Cardinal's not nesting yet

With hundreds of fans cheering and many urging him to stay, St. Louis star Albert Pujols watched the unveiling of a 10-foot statue of himself Wednesday and then said he wasn't yet sure where he would wind up next season. Pujols did not mention free agency during his speech as he stood near the 10-foot, 1,100-pound bronze likeness of himself outside his restaurant. He dodged the issue later with reporters.

"Just like my wife says, we're going to be praying about it and whenever the time comes we'll make that decision," Pujols said.

The 31-year-old Pujols is a free agent for the first time after spending his first II seasons with the Cardinals. The two sides did not discuss a contract extension during the season. TRIBUNE

All for nothing, eh, Shaq?

Even in the offseason, the Miami Heat are under fire. According to Shaquille O'Neal, the Cavaliers' 2009-10 season came down to one mission: Placating LeBron James so he would not leave at season's end as a free agent (which he eventually did, to Miami).

The latest excerpt from "Shaq Uncut: My Story" reflects on the retired center's one season as a teammate of James.

"Our coach, Mike Brown, was a nice guy, but he had to live on edge because nobody was supposed to be confrontational with LeBron," O'Neal wrote. "Nobody wanted him to leave Cleveland, so he was allowed to do whatever he wanted to do."

O'Neal wrote that Delonte West eventually called out Brown during a film session.

"'Hold up, now. You can't be pussyfooting around like that. Everyone has to be accountable for what they do, not just some of us.' Mike Brown said, 'I know, Delonte. I know.' Mike knew Delonte was right."

Mellow out, D-Wade

Dwyane Wade says the Miami Heat "played off hatred" last season, adding that's why he believes the Heat failed to win the NBA title. In an interview with Mike Krzyzewski on the Duke coach's show on SiriusXM Radio, Wade said "we wanted to win to spite people" last season, the first where he had LeBron James and Chris Bosh as teammates. "I believe that's the reason we didn't win a championship."

HOT DATE THURSDAY

That's when the Fire will introduce a new field boss, and it looks to be the same as the old one. Team officials were tightlipped Wednesday, but speculation pointed toward Fire interim coach Frank Klopas taking over permanently. Since Klopas took over early in the season. the team went 8-5-10 and reached the finals of the U.S. Open Cup. The announcement will be made at a 1 p.m. news conference at Toyota Park.

Rangers pull their punches

Robin Ventura won't have to watch video of him getting punched by Nolan Ryan in 1993 when Ventura makes his managerial debut for the White Sox on April 6 at Texas. The video has been a staple at Rangers Ballpark prior to each game. But Ryan, now the Rangers' president, told ESPN Radio in Dallas that the clip probably won't be shown. "Well, I think out of fairness to Robin and out of respect to him, I think we probably shouldn't show that when he's in town," Ryan said.

LONG distance OVE

You'd have to be 'Like Crazy' to try it

Matt

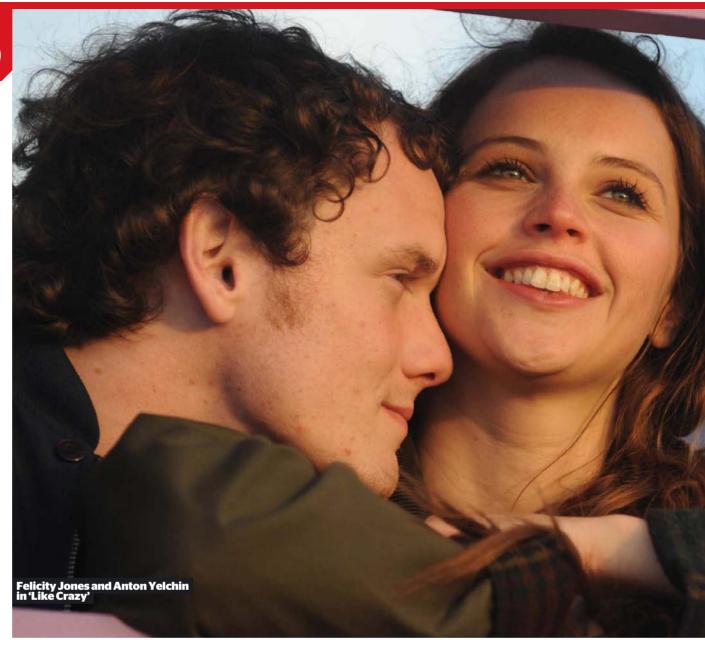

Pais

» mpais @tribune.com "Don't do it," whispers "Like Crazy" star Felicity Jones. "Stay away!" urges co-star Anton Yelchin.

That's their advice for people thinking of getting into a long-distance relationship, and the actors are only sort of kidding. The romantic, sad "Like Crazy," opening Friday, demonstrates that bridging a love between London and L.A. isn't as easy as just knowing the other person cares about you. When British college student Anna (Jones) violates her visa to spend the summer with her American boyfriend Jacob (Yelchin, pronounced yell-chin), she's forbidden from returning to the States, and the lovebirds' connection faces its biggest challenge—especially considering the presence of Jacob's fetching co-worker Sam (Jennifer Lawrence).

To build their chemistry for the largely improvised film, Yelchin, Jones and director/co-writer Drake Doremus rehearsed 12 hours a day for five straight days. The connection comes through wonderfully on screen. At the Four Seasons Hotel, Yelchin, 22, and Jones, 27, talked about separating themselves from their improv-influenced characters, singer Fergie's thoughts on missing someone and what it's like to juggle two beautiful women.

When thinking of songs about missing someone, I can't help but think of Fergie singing, "I'm going to miss you like a child misses his blanket." How well did she capture the feeling of longing there?

Felicity Jones: [Laughs.]
Anton Yelchin: I don't even know that Fergie song.

FJ: I don't know [it either], but I think it's a good line.

Felicity, how do you know when a blanket loves you back?

FJ: Oh, I don't know. That's hard. I don't know. Can a blanket love you back? I think it's pretty unrequited affection that you have for a blanket. AY: Blankets are pretty selfless, though.

FJ: They're selfish!

AY: They're selfless! Have you ever seen a blanket at the beginning of a relationship with a baby and at the end? By the end it's like a nothing. FJ: You're right. A blanket's very giving.

I asked readers for what they thought I should ask today, and @bekagan wanted to know about your own experiences and lessons from long-distance relationships.

FJ: I think they're really difficult. As actors we're all sort of like gypsies really. We're all in different places at different times and it's really hard to stay in a relationship when you're constantly moving. AY: One of the things specifically that happens with Anna and Jacob is they tend to idealize their honeymoon period and feel like because things change so dramatically, the rest of their relationship they have to try to get back to that emotion. [Instead of] acknowledging the evolution and process of their relationship, they're trying to relive a moment and therefore suffering because that moment just doesn't exist anymore. It's changed. It's something else. And I think people tend to do that whether it's a long-distance relationship or a regular relationship. I think that we tend to idealize that honeymoon period because it's that most exciting period but things will end if you can't continue to change and appreciate the changes as opposed to comparing them.

Tell me about the challenge of using improv to create these characters while still making them different from yourselves.

FJ: You start with the page, really. It depends how someone's responding to the situation and you create the character from then on. So with Anna she knows she's obsessive about Jacob and she pursues the relationship from the very beginning. And that was sort of my starting point in a way, this very forward woman. ... I think the best way to describe it is finding clues in the script and then you create the character from that.

Anton, was that a challenge for you? As you build the rapport together, I can see how it would be easy to slip into feeling like Anton and Felicity are getting to know each other, not Jacob and Anna.

AY: What you do in a rehearsal period is you work out who these people are and where their relationship is - specific moments. You do all the homework so you never leave the framework of who this human being is and, furthermore, the framework of the situation that they're in. Because if you are ever unsure of where the person's at, it's going to become you speaking. Whereas you always want to keep it as that human being. And Jacob and I are very different.

Anton, what would you say to someone who sees "Like Crazy" and says, "Oh, poor guy, having to juggle two beautiful women."? FJ: [Laughs.]

AY: I'm sure they're right to some degree! I think it's hard if you've never been through that to understand it. But most people do get it. We tend as a culture to believe there's one right person for you at all times, but there isn't. Everything is a kind of process and a process of understanding, and I think to that person I say, "[Bleep] you."

FJ: [Laughs.]

AY: No, I can understand that point, though. But to be honest—

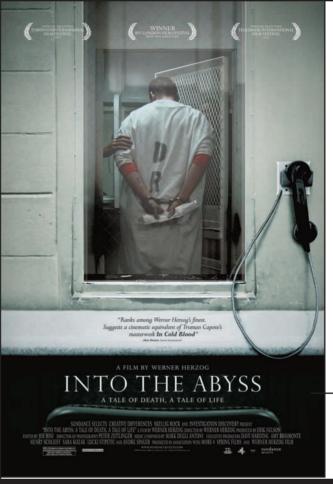

FJ: But different people bring different things out of you.

AY: Exactly. And in that place —

FJ: And that's the whole point of the film. It's not trying to be too black and white.

AY: It's not. It's gray. And that's the thing is he loves Sam but it's not the same as with Anna. And so he can't tell Sam he loves her because he knows there's a different kind of love reserved for someone else. It's an emotionally taxing situation.

Rvan Gosling

Gosling already was a movie star: He was in the freakin' "Notebook" and nominated for an Oscar ("Half Nelson"). It wasn't until this year, though, that the guy was truly EVERYWHERE, and with "Crazy Stupid Love," "Drive" and "The Ides of March," lately it's felt like Gosling's world and we're just livin' in it.

2011 BREAKOUTS

Every year brings actors and actresses who, all of a sudden, feel like household names (or, at least, major talking points) as movie stars. This year, Felicity Jones fits the bill. Her work in "Like Crazy" has made people take notice. Here are five others who, for whatever reason, have made the proverbial splash this year. For more, visit

Jessica Chastain

The actress has been in approximately every single movie this year. That's an exaggeration, but not by much. Chastain had prominent roles in "The Tree of Life," "The Help," "The Debt," "Take Shelter" and "Texas Killing Fields," as well as the upcoming "The Wettest County in the World" and "Coriolanus." And she's been strong in every role.

Elizabeth Olsen

She's Mary-Kate and Ashley's little sister, but no longer will that be her defining professional characteristic. "Martha Marcy May Marlene" officially marks Olsen's arrival and could even land her a best actress Oscar nod.

Melissa McCarthy

The Plainfield native became the most talked-about actress of "Bridesmaids." An Emmy for "Mike and Molly" and her fearless hosting of "Saturday Night Light" didn't exactly hurt her year either. An EW cover now; what's next?

Octavia Spencer

The "Ugly Betty" actress has a considerable shot at a best supporting actress Oscar nomination for her fiery yet precise turn in "The Help." It seems her co-star Viola Davis likely will land in the best actress category.

Who's that Up-and-comer Zoe Damacela drops in at Latino Fashion Week

By Erin Vogel | REDEYE

Zoe Damacela just might be the most famous fashion designer you've never heard of.

The Northwestern student has posed with President Obama in the Oval Office. She has been featured on Oprah's Angel Network. And last month, the editors of Seventeen magazine splashed her across the cover of the October issue. She counts Tyra Banks of "America's Next Top Model" fame among her mentors and clients.

But at 19 years old, Damacela has been in the game for fewer seasons than "Project Runway," which, for the record, caps its ninth cycle Thursday with a very special "Behind the Seams" episode.

A Whitney Young High School grad, she sold her first dress to a classmate when she was 14 years old. Now, her custom dresses run anywhere from $60 to $150—although she once sold a piece for $3,000.

"It started small, but it spread a lot through word-of-mouth," Damacela said. "I was making clothes for my friends and my classmates, and then I was making clothes for their older sisters, and their parents, and then their parents' friends. Then I was making clothes for more strangers than people I knew, and I think it just got around Chicago."

Today Damacela is president of Zoe Damacela Apparel, a custom designs business she operates out of her dorm room at Northwestern University and at zoedamacelaapparel.com. She'll be featured Thursday as part of Latino Fashion Week, which runs through Sunday. Now in its fifth year, the week features fashion events, designer talks, art displays and an expo.

Damacela spoke with RedEye—after finishing her Russian Literature midterm, natch—about her inspiration, her Latino heritage and the juggling act of balancing business with college life. ERIN VOGEL IS A REDEYE INTERN.

What trends have you been inspired by lately?

I am a really big fan of mixed patterns and mixed colors. I like to describe my own style as being very eclectic. People would describe it as being really bright and a little bit flamboyant.

You've said you hope to eventually open your own store. Where?

I'd like my first store to be based out of Chicago. I kind of grew up in Califor-

FASHION FLY-BY

Looking for a quick hit on Latinc Fashion Week? Here are three offerings that caught RedEye's eye for who—or what—was being featured. E.V.

Alicia Estrada

The woman behind the vintage-inspired Stop Staring! label will bring her collection to Chicago. She has dressed celebrities such as Chloe Sevigny, Dita Von Teese and Zooey Deschanel.

Zoe Damacela

The 19-year-old Chicago designer will be honored with the AWSUM award. For those keeping score at home, that's the Amazing Wonderful Super Unique Me prize. nia, but I definitely feel like a Chicago girl. People always tell me that I need to move to New York City, but I think Chicago is amazing, especially for upcoming designers.

Chicago is awesome because there are a lot of people here who are excited about artists who are up-and-coming. I think that the fact that there's not a ton of designers in Chicago makes you really stand out too.

How does your Latino heritage affect your work?

My mom is from Ecuador and my dad is half black and half Mexican—being a Hispanic person is a really big part of who I am.

I went to Ecuador for Christmas last year, and seeing all the fabrics, buying clothes that were made in Ecuador and seeing firsthand what some of the culture was like—that was a really big influence on me.

Has working as a young designer resulted more or less in your favor?

I think it's kind of both. I think that people who are not in the fashion industry or people who are already veterans of the fashion industry are really excited.

But people who are just starting out in the fashion industry don't take me as seriously as a designer, especially when I was in high school competing with people who had spent thousands of dollars going to fashion school.

I try not to focus on that. There are so many more people who are enthusiastic about what I'm doing than people who have negative things to say about the fact that I'm really young.

What is it like trying to balance your college life with your business?

It can be really hard because I want to be a regular person, but I don't have time to just hang out. My schedule is so crazy that I'm usually booked 14 hours a day. It can be hard to be a normal college student when I'm so busy all the time. I didn't have a normal high school experience because I was starting up my business, so once I got to college, I was trying to rectify that. I chose Northwestern instead of a fashion school because I had studied fashion in high school. I live on campus, and I joined a sorority.

Fashion Lounge & Expo Hours

The three-day exhibition of designer apparel and fashion accessories opens Thursday. Hours vary.

WINDY CITY SWAGGER

When Cesar Rolon Jr. founded Latino Fashion Week five years ago, he had zero experience in the field, but wanted to showcase designs from the community

"What really means a lot to me is supporting local artists," said Rolon, who works in community affairs, marketing, promotions, planning and development.

"I don't think there's enough of that in Chicago. Even though I did this for my community, I really can't say enough about how much amazing talent there is in this city. We're not recognized enough for what we do here."

The theme of this year's event, which kicked off Tuesday, is "Art in Fashion." Here are five Chicagoans to keep an eye on. E.V.

Jacqueline Amezcua

Amezcua was born and raised in Chicago. Amezcua earned her degree in fashion design at Columbia College Chicago. Her clothes are inspired by 1980s love stories like "Pretty in Pink" and "Sixteen Candles."

Nicole Suarez

Suarez was a finalist of the "Nuestra Belleza Latina" reality show and is a student at DePaul University.

Borris Powell

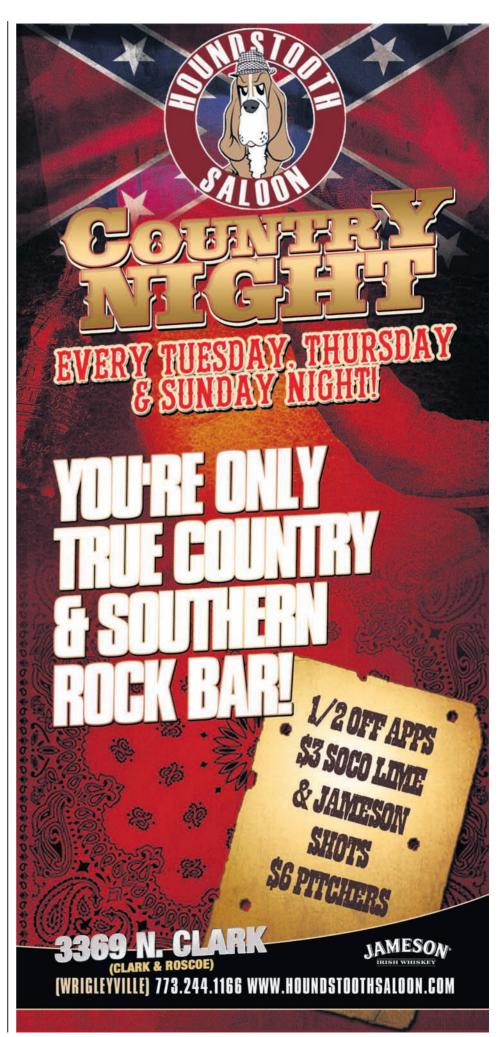

Powell moved to Chicago in 1997 to start his design career. Winner of the Oscars Designer Challenge in 2011, his dress was worn by Brazilian model Izabela Garcia at this year's Oscars.

Elhadi 'Haj' Gueye

Born in Senegal, Gueye moved to New York in 1989 and worked as a designer for Macy's private label. He then moved to Chicago and founded Haj Designs, Inc. Gueye has provided clothing for "The Bernie Mac Show" and "Head of State."

Ritu Boorgu

Originally from Mumbai, India, Boorgu launched Westmont-based Charisma Studio in 2009. Her boutique is known for its collections from popular designers from Pakistan and India.

THE FIT & the tantrums

Kelly talks do's & don'ts of fashion

By Anthony Roberts

OR REDEVE

Clinton Kelly has fashioned time to fit him.

Between cooking up commentary on the ABC daytime show "The Chew" and advising people "What Not To Wear" on the TLC mainstay, the style guru is partnering with Canadian tailoring company Stitch It to launch Perfect Fit by Clinton Kelly.

The newly branded shop opens its doors in the Orland Square Mall on Friday and promises to help guys in need find just the right look and feel to form an unforgettable outfit.

Kelly, a former Northwestern graduate student, is more than happy to school scruffy Chicago guys on the finer points of style. Kelly recently spoke to RedEye to give a few pointers on how regular guys can up their fashion flair.

TALK TO CLINTON

Perfect Fit by Clinton Kelly at the Stitch It store opens at 10 a.m. Friday in the Orland Square Mall. Kelly will arrive at 2:30 p.m. At 5 p.m., he will provide one-minute style consultations to the first 100 people to visit the store.

IT'S SHOE, NOT ME

It's not impossible or even challenging to achieve your own amazing feet.

Kelly says: "I think the average American man could benefit greatly from a casual shoe that is not a cross-training sneaker. Perhaps a suede loafer or a boot."

PASS ALONG GOOD JEANS

For all those caught in a denim dilemma, it's time to replace the Jordache look.

Kelly says: "I also think that many men need to think about new jeans. There have been great advances in denim design, and all too often I see men wearing the same jeans Seinfeld wore in the '90s."

WELCOME, RULE BREAKERS

While some choose to adhere to outdated myths, those who break rules can define their cool.

Kelly says: "There's a huge difference between the rules and what people think are rules. For example, it's a 'rule' that your socks should match your trousers, not your shoes. Is it the end of the world if they don't? Probably not. If a stylish man wants to wear an interesting sock as a statement, I'm cool with that. Brown and black are both neutrals and can be worn together whenever you damn well please, when done correctly."

BODY LANGUAGE

Keeping your grooming game intact can keep you from striking out.

Kelly says: "Bathe. Clean your ears. Clip your fingernails. Clip your nose hairs. Make sure the hair on your head isn't too perfect or crunchy. Apply only one squirt of fragrance to your body, not your clothes and don't be a tool."

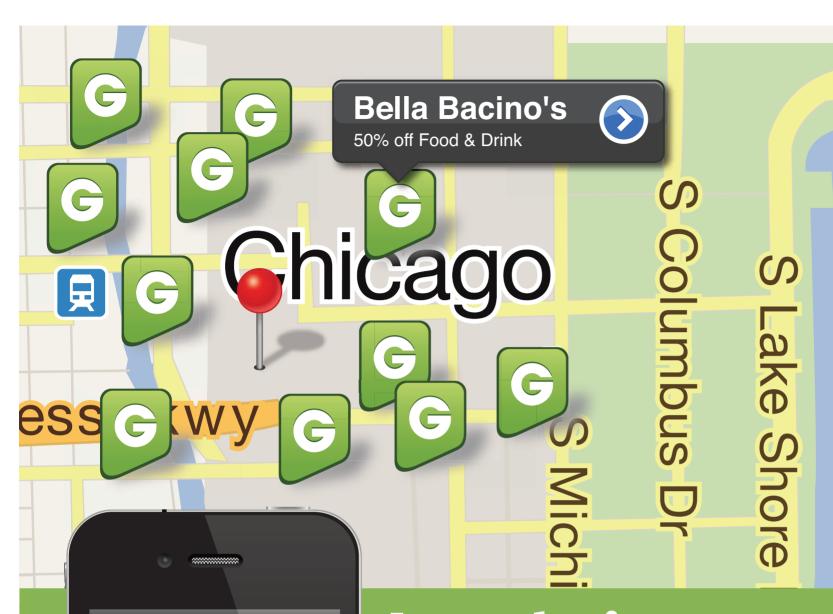

IF THE SUIT FITS, WEAR IT

The well-dressed man doesn't have to be the one with the deepest pockets.

Kelly says: "Style really isn't about how much money you spend; it's about having a point a view, knowing how clothes should fit and knowing how to put an outfit together. Buy the best quality you can afford, have those pieces tailored so they fit you like a glove, and replicate the outfits you see at more expensive stores. It really boils down to fit.

"You could spend $5,000 on a Prada suit and if it's too big you'll look like a schlump. If it's too tight, you'll look like a stuffed sausage. You're better off wearing a $200 suit that looks like it was custommade because you had an expert fit it on you. If you don't have fit, you don't have style. End of story." The Barrelhouse Flat has landed in Lincoln Park

The Barrelhouse Flat

2624 N. Lincoln Ave.

Off to a good start

773-857-0421

By Emily Van Zandt

Four years ago, my 21-year-old self wandered into the bar that once occupied 2624 N. Lincoln Ave. I ended up leaving my wallet, credit cards, passport, student ID and much of my dignity behind at the late-night bar, then known as Déjà Vu.

Luckily for my belongings, nothing about The Barrelhouse Flat, a throwback craft cocktail lounge helmed by former Violet Hour bartender Stephen Cole, even remotely resembles Déjà Vu (or its later incarnation, The Rockbox). Bartenders are in the zone, shouting for more Buffalo Trace and giving cocktail shakers a workout. The drinks here are serious, and seriously good. But how does Barrelhouse Flat fit in on this strip of sports bars with its party-hard DePaul crowd?

Not so well—at least, not yet.

Walk in the front, and you'll find a bustling seat-yourself main room with a 1920s vibe. When my friend and I arrived around 9:30 p.m. Friday, every nook of space on the first-come, first-served first floor seemed taken. We hoped upstairs was a bit more relaxed.

No such luck. The overflowing tables and plush seating surrounding the second bar upstairs were just as hectic. We were whisked through a swinging door into the billiard room, and our busy waitress couldn't have looked more surprised when we decided to order several cocktails.

The stars here, after all, are the drinks. The cocktail menu is seriously impressive; name a classic drink, and this team can make it. More than 50 are listed. (Ironically, table after table was crowded with tell-tale pint glasses—a beer crowd in a cocktail bar.)

Divided neatly into stirred, shaken, bubbles and egg categories, all cocktails are priced at a reasonable $10, which is reason enough to come back. The Clover Club, an egg-white drink with gin, raspberry syrup, lemon and grapefruit bitters, was well-balanced and seriously refreshing. Even my partner-in-crime, a guy who prefers his cocktails in the form of straight whiskey, snuck more than one sip. His favorite, naturally, ended up being the Brooklyn—a mix of rye whiskey, vermouth, amaro and maraschino liqueur (the Whiskey Smash came in a close second with its blend of bourbon, lemon,

Cocktail, a sort of flip that blended cognac, port, simple syrup and whole egg—decadently creamy.

If the menu seems overwhelming, don't hesitate to ask for a recommendation. Our server may have been busy, but by the end she was giving tips for our next visit.

mint and bitters). I closed out with the Coffee

But even with such delicious drinks, it's hard to savor a cocktail that's sipped between leans to avoid drunken pool shots and the distracting eye-rolls of 22-year-old dudes clearly brought here by their 21-year-old ladies.

Without a substantial food menu to draw in Lincoln Park-ers for dinner and a cocktail, the team at Barrel-house Flat is going to have to hold tight, keep churning out excellent cocktails and hope the crowds shift accordingly.

You can bring undergrads to a cocktail bar, but that doesn't mean they'll try anything but cheap beer. And that's a real tragedy.

EVANZANDT@TRIBUNE.COM | @MMXBARS

The food situation

The food menu's brief, so don't come here looking for much more than snacks or a sandwich to split. The pig face poutine ($13) was lacking in the hearty, sinful toppings that make for a really good poutine, but the deviled eggs ($3 each) were satisfyingly smoky thanks to tobacco onions on top and ham in the filling. Though you might be tempted after a few rounds, skip the dips ($12 for three), which all tasted overly salty and were left fairly untouched.

BAR-GUMENTS

SETTLING AGE-OLD, BAR-BASED DISAGREEMENTS ONE ARGUMENT AT A TIME

What is a bar-gument you ask? For as long as there have been watering holes, there have been disagreements. Some prefer martinis with gin, some with vodka. Bar-guments is here to settle some longstanding bar conflicts once and for all.

This week: Which is more important-clean bar seat, or clean bathroom?

BATHROOM

Emily VanZandt

EVANZANDT@TRIBUNE.COM @MMXBARS

Do I appreciate a tidy bathroom at a bar? Absolutely. But I don't select a watering hole based on the cleanliness of the room where I'm going to spend the least amount of time. Getting ranch on my jeans after sliding in a booth or my skirt sticking to a barstool because someone spilled a fruity martini on it an hour earlier is not OK. No matter how disgusting the bathroom is, you usually can work around the filth, but unless you want to stand all night, a clean chair is a must. -DANA KAVAN

There is rarely a mess on a bar seat that a good wipe of a rag or napkin can't handle. And if the thought of lingering germs really has you that nervous-hey, at least you've got a pair of jeans between you and the gross. Bathrooms, on the other hand, are on a whole different level of disgusting. There is no dishrag in the world that can handle some of those messes. Am I going to avoid a bar just because the bathroom is bad? No. But, given the choice, I'd rather brush off a few crumbs than play the "to squat or not" game, -emily van zandt

Next up for Graham Elliot? Not a [bleeping] burger joint

Graham Elliot was all set to open his third restaurant next year, and it was going to be a hamburger joint called—what else?—Grahamburger. This, he said, was even though his fellow "MasterChef" judge Joe Bastianich told him, "It's (expletive) stupid. There are too many burger places anyway."

As it turned out, a larger restaurant space became available on West Randolph Street, so, Elliot said, he shifted gears. The new restaurant, targeted to open next spring, now probably will be called GEB (for Graham Elliot Bistro), and the idea is simplicity.

"The food is based on three key elements, completely stripped down to its primary components and nothing more," Elliot said, noting that entrees will be priced around $20 and will include a few items from the original Graham Elliot menu, among them the beef stroganoff, split pea soup and Buffalo chicken. Said Bastianich: "Good. He's coming to his senses. Enough (expletive) burger restaurants." TRIBUNE

Grand Theft Awesome

If the trailer for "Grand Theft Auto V," which debuted online Wednesday, is any indication, the latest installment of the heralded (and highly controversial) franchise looks like three different kinds of amazing. We learn the game will take place in San Andreas and not Liberty City, there is a new older protagonist (miss you already, Niko Bellic from "GTA IV"), and the game's landscape is ridiculously wide open. Characters hike through mountains, ride around in souped-up low-riders and get into high-speed chases with authorities. You know what they say: If it ain't broke Now if you'll excuse me, I'm off to camp out in front of Best Buy for the release, even though the game doesn't have an official release date yet. HIPSTER BREAKUP ANTHEMS

In honor of Zooey Deschanel ("New Girl," She and Him) and Ben Gibbard (Death Cab for Cutie) going their separate ways, we've put together some songs to help you wallow, and then feel better. The full recovery process is on you, though. REDEVE

Flume

Bon Iver

Don't let the success of Justin Vernon's band suggest that they're uncool. The first track from "For Emma, Forever Ago" may demonstrate Vernon's trademark jumbled lyrics (did he say "gluey feathers"?), but it perfectly kicks off a record that allows you to sink into loneliness and come out the other side feeling like things might be OK. Maybe. —Matt Pais

The Format

One of Nate Ruess' best, catchiest songs about the ex who cheated on him from a concept album ("Dog Problems") about the breakup, the track's opening lines deliver all the zing you need to know: "Oh, no, was it worth it?/Starting now, I'm starting over/I'm gonna sleep with the next person I meet."

—Matt Pais

Hope There's Someone Antony & The Johnsons For that whole "I'm probably going to grow old and die alone" segment of the post-breakup. Cry, hipster. Cry. —Emily Van Zandt

Breaking Up Is Hard To Do

Neil Sedaka

Go with me on this, hipsters: When a song has been covered by everyone from Gloria Estefan to Nick Carter over the years, clearly the original must have some merit when it comes to soothing a broken heart. The lyrics may be squeaky clean ("They say that breaking up is hard to do/ Now I know, I know that it's true/Don't say that this is the end/Instead of breaking up I wish that we were making up again"), but I think this is a case of old lameness being the new coolness.

-Lisa Arnett

Back In Your Head Tegan and Sara

More of a "Hey, here's why we broke up" song than a "We broke up and I MISS YOU SO" track, this song still has enough gravity and emotion to resonate with those fresh out of a long relationship. —Ernest Wilkins

Foolish Love

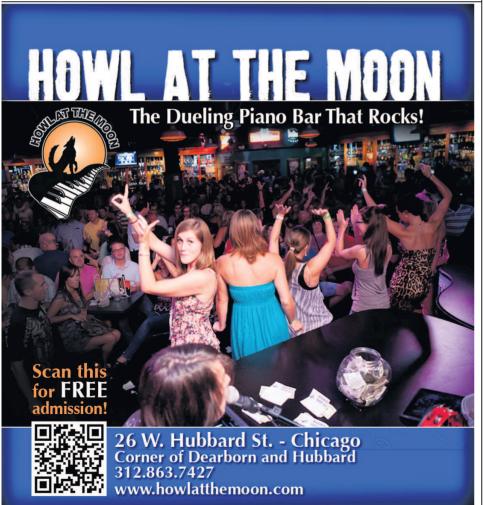

Rufus Wainwright Lumbering piano. Depressing, nasal voice. I mean: "I don't want to hold you and feel so helpless/I don't want to smell you and lose my senses." Yeah, that about covers it. Plus, since this song is 6 minutes long, you can get your emotions out in the beginning and then enjoy as it picks up tempo later on.

-Emily Van Zandt
